emphasizes that for economic development the rate of increase in real per capita income should be higher than the growth rate of population.

- Welfare: Economic development is regarded as a process whereby there is an increase in the consumption of goods and services by individuals. From the welfare perspective, economic development is defined as a sustained improvement in health, literacy and standard of living.

- Social Indicators: Social indicators are normally referred to as basic and collective needs of the people. The direct provision of basic needs such as health, education, food, water, sanitation and housing facilities check social backwardness.

11.4 Determinants of Economic Development

Economic development is not determined by any single factor. Economic development depends on Economic, Social, Political and Religious factors. We can simply classify it into Economic and Non-economic factors
