The manager looks after the management of the organization, whereas administrator is responsible for the administration of the organization. Management focuses on managing people and their work.

So it is concluded that the administration is ought to take business decisions while the management need to execute them to get things done with and through other functional staff working under them who are called employees of the same organization(s). For example, the Board of Directors with the CEO/MD may be called Administration, while the Managers of various units like Production, Marketing, Finance, Accounting, Distribution and Research & Development may be called Management of the said organization.

Theoretically, it can be said that both are different terms, but practically, it is found that the terms are more or less same. A manager performs both administrative and functional activities. Although the managers who are working on the top most level are said to be the part of administration, the managers working on the middle or lower level represents management. So, it could be concluded that administration is above management.

1.04 Management Process

The substance of management should be identified as a process. A process is something that what a person does in the context of his individual duties and responsibilities assigned by his or her immediate higher authority.

A process also implies ongoing and unceasing cyclical operations. In management there is planning-action-control cycle. Defining the concept must incorporate this management cycle. A process indicates the dynamic nature of management.

It also implies that change is a constant reality of organisational life and management is the management of change. Lastly, management is regarded as a social process because it is directly concerned with management of human resources in order to secure cooperation and teamwork from the people in their performance.

There are twin purposes of the management process:

(1) Maximum productivity or profitability and

(2) Maximum human welfare and satisfaction.

There are five parts of management as a process: first, the co-ordination of resources; second, the performance of managerial functions as a means of achieving co-ordination; the third, establishing the objective or purpose of management process, i.e., it must be purposeful managerial activity; the fourth aspect is that management is a social process, and the fifth is its cyclical nature.

1. Management is Co-Ordination:

The manager of an enterprise must effectively coordinate all activities and resources of the organisation, namely, men, machines, materials and money the four M's of management.

2. Management is a Process:

The manager achieves proper co-ordination of resources by means of the managerial functions of planning, organising, staffing, directing (or leading and motivating) and controlling.

3. Management is a Purposive Process:

It is directed toward the achievement of predetermined goals or objectives. Without an objective, we have no destination to reach or

12th Commerce Unit 1.indd 4 09-12-2021 11.18.53 AM